EVIDENCE

Q1 - Discovery and qualification (78/100; weight 30%): "A prospect wanted a product demonstration. I asked about team size and their current process, then learned their manager was not involved. I added a manager discovery meeting before the demo. It helped us explain the right workflow, although I did not track the eventual operational result."

EVIDENCE

Q2 - Pipeline discipline (68/100; weight 25%): "I review opportunities each Monday and update dates. I use my judgment about how positive the calls feel. Last month two deals moved to the next quarter after purchasing delays. I had included both in commit. I am starting to require a confirmed decision date but cannot give a forecast-accuracy figure yet."

EVIDENCE

Q3 - Objection handling (76/100; weight 25%): "When a customer raised price, I asked what budget they had and reviewed the basic package. My manager approved a smaller scope. I did not promise a discount independently. The customer kept talking with us, but I did not personally own the closing decision."

EVIDENCE

Q4 - Client handoff (72/100; weight 20%): "I send an email with the contract and contact names to the account team. I try to attend the kickoff. I do not yet use a standard checklist for risks or customer success measures; our account manager fills those in."

LIMITATIONS

- Limited direct ownership evidence; no inference about capability outside the specific examples provided.
- Synthetic scores are illustrative, not real assessment results.
- All communication, audio, distraction, confidence and risk signals are synthetic display examples. No real audio/video was analyzed.

Integrity risk context

Simulated risk example only; no integrity assessment of a real person occurred.
