

Taylor Reed

Account Executive

Resume: 58/100 | Interview: 51/100 | Overall: 55/100

Retail sales associate exploring a first B2B account executive position.

Discovery and qualification: 52/100 (weight 30%)

Describe a discovery call that changed your sales approach. What did you learn and what did you do?

I usually explain the features first and ask whether the price works. In retail I helped someone compare two products. I have not run a business discovery call or mapped decision-makers, so I would need a process and coaching.

Pipeline discipline: 48/100 (weight 25%)

How do you manage your pipeline and forecast? Give a concrete example.

I keep a personal list and contact people when I have time. I have not used a formal opportunity pipeline or forecast model. I would mark a deal likely when a customer seemed interested, but I cannot provide an accuracy example.

Objection handling: 54/100 (weight 25%)

Tell me about a price objection and how you handled it without overpromising.

I would tell the customer we are the best and try to get a lower price approved. I do not yet know how to compare staffing service levels. I would ask my manager before making a guarantee or offering a discount.

Client handoff: 50/100 (weight 20%)

How do you hand a newly won account to the delivery team?

I would send the buyer information to the next team. I have not done an account kickoff and cannot give an example of documenting delivery risks. A checklist would help me know what to include.

Limitations and follow-up

Limited role-specific experience was explicitly acknowledged. Do not equate a low demo score with a general hiring recommendation.

Use a practical discovery exercise and assess whether a junior sales pathway is more appropriate.

No real interview, recording, perception analysis, or integrity assessment exists. All evidence is an authored fictional transcript.