

Casey Bennett

Customer Support Specialist

Resume: 90/100 | Interview: 92/100 | Overall: 91/100

Support specialist with four years of structured help-desk experience.

Customer communication: 93/100 (weight 30%)

Describe a frustrated customer interaction and how you responded.

A customer had lost access before a deadline. I acknowledged the impact, repeated the goal, and gave a twenty-minute update commitment rather than promising an immediate fix. I checked access logs, involved the account administrator, and sent updates until restored. I documented the cause and confirmed they could complete the task.

Troubleshooting: 92/100 (weight 30%)

Walk me through diagnosing a customer who cannot access their account.

I first check the exact error, URL, and whether others are affected. I verify identity using our approved process, never ask for a password, and check account state and service health. If a safe browser check fails, I record the steps and escalate with a redacted screenshot. I verify the customer can sign in before closing.

Prioritization and escalation: 91/100 (weight 20%)

How do you prioritize competing tickets and decide when to escalate?

I prioritize safety or access-wide incidents, then business impact and SLA. Yesterday I linked six duplicate reports to one outage and escalated once with affected counts. A single how-to question received an update while I worked the incident. I documented owners and next update times.

Documentation and privacy: 94/100 (weight 20%)

What do you record in case notes and what information should you avoid collecting?

I record the reported issue, timestamps, troubleshooting, outcome, and next owner. I exclude passwords, authentication tokens, and unnecessary personal information. Screenshots are redacted. For a suspected security issue I use the restricted escalation route instead of copying details broadly.

Limitations and follow-up

Authored synthetic evidence, not a verified operational support history or media-based evaluation.

Validate case-quality examples and discuss adapting the process to staffing-client workflows.

No real interview, recording, perception analysis, or integrity assessment exists. All evidence is an authored fictional transcript.
