

Avery Morgan

Account Executive

Resume: 92/100 | Interview: 92/100 | Overall: 92/100

B2B account executive with five years in professional-services sales.

Simulated interview analysis and signals

Clarity: 94% | Confidence: 92% | Engagement: 95%

Evaluation reliability: 94% | AI-aided response risk: Low

Conditions: Good | Signal confidence: High | Audio issues: None | Distraction: Low | Integrity: Low

Clear, structured examples connect discovery, qualification, and delivery. The simulated presentation is confident and engaged; validate the claimed outcomes in follow-up.

All values above are synthetic display examples. No real audio/video was analyzed and no real integrity assessment was performed.

Discovery and qualification: 94/100 (weight 30%)

Describe a discovery call that changed your sales approach. What did you learn and what did you do?

A regional client asked for twenty placements in four weeks. I asked about coverage gaps, attrition, and manager availability. The real constraint was weekend coverage, not headcount. I mapped the five critical shifts and brought delivery into a scoping call. We proposed eight initial placements with weekly checkpoints instead of promising twenty. The first cohort covered all five shifts and the client expanded after six weeks.

Pipeline discipline: 92/100 (weight 25%)

How do you manage your pipeline and forecast? Give a concrete example.

Every Friday I inspect stage age, a dated next step, the decision process, and a customer-confirmed timeline. In Q3 I removed two verbal commitments from commit because procurement had not approved terms. That reduced my forecast from $310,000 to $245,000; we closed $238,000. My manager could plan delivery capacity using the smaller, defensible number.

Objection handling: 90/100 (weight 25%)

Tell me about a price objection and how you handled it without overpromising.

A buyer said our fee was eighteen percent above another offer. I clarified the scope and showed our agreed service levels, not unsupported competitor claims. I offered a smaller pilot at the published rate rather than a discount I could not authorize. The buyer selected the pilot. I documented the assumptions and did not guarantee a hiring outcome.

Client handoff: 91/100 (weight 20%)

How do you hand a newly won account to the delivery team?

Before handoff I review the signed scope, contacts, success measures, promised timelines, and open risks with delivery. The client joins a kickoff. For one account I highlighted a pending security review and assigned an owner before work began. I stayed through the first checkpoint and confirmed the customer understood the next steps.

Limitations and follow-up

Results are self-reported within an authored demonstration. No employer verification or recorded interview exists.

Validate quota attainment with references and ask how the approach scales across several concurrent accounts.

No real interview, recording, perception analysis, or integrity assessment exists. All evidence is an authored fictional transcript.